Punk Rock Philosophy

Philosophy. The first wave of punk rock was "aggressively modern" and differed from what came before. According to Ramones drummer Tommy Ramone, "In its initial form, a lot of [1960s] stuff was innovative and exciting. Unfortunately, what happens is that people who could not hold a candle to the likes of Hendrix started noodling away. Soon you had endless solos that went nowhere.

The punk subculture includes a diverse array of ideologies, fashion, and other forms of expression, visual art, dance, literature and film. It is largely characterised by anti-establishment views and the promotion of individual freedom, and is centred on a loud, aggressive genre of rock music called punk rock. Its adherents are referred to as "punks", also spelled "punx" in the modern day.

The video is a convincing short history showing how punk arose naturally from trends in the late 50s and 60s that clearly pointed the way. Like every such history, especially one undertaken in the span of fifteen minutes, it leaves out some pretty heavyweight figures who should have a central place in the narrative.

Both bands were solid touring acts, but Fugazi painted themselves in a corner with their rhetoric and emotional range. Fugazi's audience were a MUCH bigger bunch of tattletales and crybabies, and closer in age to the band themselves, so there was always a lot more conflict between audience and band.

Grace Slick's haunting voice and "let it all hang out" lifestyle (she once removed her blouse and performed topless because of the hot weather) made her a perfect fit for psychedelic rock pioneers Jefferson Airplane and its successors, Jefferson Starship and Starship. As a songwriter, Slick was responsible for two of the band's best-known songs, "White Rabbit" and "Somebody to Love."
